

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

THIS BOOK HAS been many years in the making, and its existence is a testament to the advice and support I have received from a range of scholars and friends, as well as multiple institutions across four different countries. I am delighted to have the opportunity to publicly acknowledge these debts.

Research for this book has been supported by a number of fellowships. The earliest parts were begun at the Newberry Library, Chicago, and I am grateful to the Newberry, and the Humanities Research Centre and the Centre for the Study of the Renaissance at the University of Warwick, for funding my fellowship. Special thanks to Lia Markey and Suzanne Karr Schmidt at the Newberry for making me feel so welcome during my stay—and since. I acknowledge the Dr. Greg Wells Research Award and the Centre for the Study of the Renaissance for funding a visit to the Cambridge University Library. I am also grateful for the Early Career Fellowship awarded to me by the Institute of Advanced Study at Warwick, which helped me to continue working on the book in the awkward post-PhD doldrums.

Parts of Chapters 2 and 3 were originally published in “Biblical Typology and Royal Power in Elizabethan Civic Entertainments,” Royal Studies Journal 8, no. 1 (2021): 54–78. My article, “Elizabeth I as Judith: Reassessing the Apocryphal Widow’s Appearance in Elizabethan Royal Iconography,” Renaissance Studies 31, no. 5 (November 2017): 707–22, appears in a revised form throughout. In addition, a shorter version of Chapter 4 was presented at the 2018 Society for Renaissance Studies Conference, and an early draft of the Introduction was presented at the “Sex and Gender Politics: Medieval and Early Modern Studies Symposium” at Northumbria University in October 2019, and I am grateful for the fruitful discussions at these events.

I thank the team at Arc Humanities Press, especially Erika Gaffney, who originally commissioned the book, and Danna R. Messer, who oversaw the book from delivery to publication. Danna and Erika are the best commissioning editors anyone could work with, and I am grateful for all the help and advice they have offered to me over the years.

During the book’s long gestation, I have accumulated a great number of debts: these range from conversations about aspects of my argument to friends who offered encouraging words and saved me from myself by taking me for coffee and/or cake. It thus gives me great pleasure to thank and acknowledge: Karra Adam, Jo Adamson, Marina Gerzic, Mitchell Gould, Tess Grant, Natalie Hanley-Smith, Chris Hay, Lisa Hopkins, Marnie Hughes-Warrington, Carole Levin, Liam Lewis, Dolly MacKinnon, Peter Marshall, Sarah Pinto, Peter Sherlock, Sophie Shorland, Liam Sims, Adrian Streete, Jayne Sweet, Heather Thaxter, Kat Waters, Micheline White, Rachel Willie, and Elena Woodacre, as well as the team at Coffee#1 in Stafford and all my students who have accepted my obsession with Elizabeth—or bae, as they know her—with varying levels of patience and bemused exasperation over the years.

In addition to the wonderful people mentioned above, I have to single out a few individuals for special thanks. My research assistant, Luke Holloway, is possibly the only person on the planet who cares about referencing more than me: I am very fortunate that he was able to save me from a variety of blunders, and grateful for his incisive comments and general good humour. Cristina Harrison, curator of the Much Hadham Forge Museum, was an incredible source of knowledge about the museum's wall paintings, and freely shared her vast expertise with me. Nick Thursfield went above and beyond to take photos of the diptych at St. Faith's, Gaywood, which meant I could have the perfect cover image. Kasia Kosior talked me through a thorny, last minute methodological issue, and I am extremely grateful for her help and support, both in that particular hour of need, and more generally. Esther van Raamsdonk and Mike Rose have been steadfast companions: I am grateful for their sage advice and friendship, and their patience with all things Elizabeth related. Nikki Clark is a constant source of inspiration and delight, and I am extremely lucky to have her in my life: lava.

The triple dedication of this book acknowledges three people without whom I would not be here to write this. John and Nurhaida provided much needed love, support, and encouragement from afar, and helped to keep me grounded. And finally, Joseph: thank you for always being there, for listening to me, talking through ideas with me, supporting me no matter what, feeding me, and sharing your life with me. I couldn't have done this without you.
