This book would not exist were it not for the support of many people over the past two decades. First and foremost, this book exists because people living in the Yopno Valley opened their homes and their lives to me. In 2007 I traveled to Nian village to ask permission to live there for a year or more. I was taken to a large community house that would later become my home and I explained to a room full of people I had just met why I wanted to live with them. For what felt like an hour, I nervously waited as those gathered in the house discussed the matter with each other. In each of the villages I visited and lived in—Ganggalut, Weskokop, Gua, Wurap, and Wandabung—I had a similar experience, and each welcomed me with more generosity than I could have hoped for. My debt to the people I lived and worked with in the Yopno Valley is immense.

Unfortunately, there is not space here to thank everyone by name who supported me during visits in 2007–9, 2013, 2014, and 2015. But I want to single out those who hosted me and who were involved on a daily basis in my research: in Nian village, James, Damlap, and Martin Qaqa, Baiangen, Sasa, Joshua and Yufori, and Katumon, Ronḡum and Mangau all cared for me in every possible way during the year I lived there. Koki, Dronjo, Sawkepe, and Monaks in Weskokop; Yarekine, Kimake, and Willie in Gua; and Paul, Kembon, and Immanuel in Ganggalut did the same during my stays in those villages. Not only did these people provide food and warmth but they were also some of my closest interlocutors and dearest friends. I also want to thank Ginson Saonu, who first directed my attention to the Yopno Valley as a potential research site, and Bomi, who made my initial visit to the area possible. To the many, many people, too many to name here, who supplied me with gifts, tangible and intangible, without which this book could not have been written: b̄it kwak toksi, ya yanjsi daisat.

Many others in Papua New Guinea were essential to the completion of this project. Georgia Kaipu and James Robbins at the National Research Institute of Papua New Guinea not only paved the bureaucratic way for this research to happen but also were interested and engaged onlookers. Leanne Ererepe at the National Archives of Papua New Guinea provided much assistance in locating patrol reports. The staff of the Tree Kangaroo Conservation Program in Lae—especially Ruby Yamuna, Karau Kuna Jr., Gabriel Porolak, Danny Samandingke, Sue Tallarico, and Toby Ross—provided much entertainment and assistance on my trips to Lae. A short stay at the SIL-New Guinea branch center at Ukarumpa offered me the chance to work with some consultants intensively in relative quiet. I must thank Andy Grosh and Rene van den Berg for their help arranging my visit and their hospitality during my stay. I especially thank David Troolin for giving me the opportunity to present some preliminary results of my research while at Ukarumpa and for the questions and comments of those in attendance. Many thanks to Wesley and LeeAnn Reed for their many helpful insights into Yopno language and social life during this stay.

In Australia, Nicholas Evans, Alexandra Aikhenvald, RMW Dixon, Nick Enfield, I Wayan Arka, Mark Donohue, and Andrew Pawley all provided valuable comments and support over the years. In North America, this book has benefited from conversations with and comments from many people: Shunsuke Nozawa, Aaron Ansell, Gretchen Pfeil, Alejandro Paz, Christopher Ball, Erin Debenport, Rob Blunt, Alex Golub, Anne Ch'ien, Jerrold Sadock, Danilyn Rutherford, Costas Nakassis, Paul Manning, Jordan Haug, Kathy Creely, Elizabeth Keating, Anthony Webster, Jason Cons, Kamran Ali, Craig Campbell, Paola Canova, Celina de Sá, John Hartigan, Ward Keeler, Rebecca J. Lewis, Sofian Merabet, Marina Peterson, Aaron Sandel, Pauline Strong, Jürgen Streeck, Maria Sidorkina, Deina Rabie, John Haviland, Kit Woolard, Judith Irvine, Barbra Meek, Charles Zuckerman, Ilana Gershon, Jack Sidnell, Laurie Graham, Greg Urban, Paige West, Niko Besnier, Norma Mendoza-Denton, Elinor Ochs, Alessandro Duranti, Marjorie Goodwin, Paul Kroskrity, Jessica Cattelino, Jason Throop, Paul Silverstein, Robert Brightman, Thushara Hewage, China Scherz, Eve Danziger, Ira Bashkow, Mark Sicoli, Ida Hoequist, Rachel Apone, and Misty Bastian. Jim Lance and Susan Specter at Cornell University Press along with Michelle Scott and Gail Chalew helped to transform my manuscript into this book and improved it significantly in the process.

Lise Dobrin, Don Kulick, Francesca Merlan, Joel Robbins, Alan Rumsey, Bambi Schieffelin, and Rupert Stasch not only provided valuable input at important moments along the way but their research and writings on Melanesia inspired much that is in this book. As ethnographers who have had a much longer relationship with people in the Yopno Valley than I have had, and whose research has laid the foundations for my own, I am grateful to Jürg Wassmann and Verena Keck for their supportive suggestions and comments over the years. Kensy Cooperrider and Raphael Núñez generously asked me to participate in research they were conducting in the Yopno Valley, and my experience working with them was profoundly eye-opening. The same is true for conversations with Hannah Sarvasy, whose linguistic research in the Huon-Finisterre region helped me understand so much about the Yopno language.

Portions of several chapters were published previously, and I want to thank the reviewers and editors for the care and attention they gave to these materials.

Part of chapter 5 appears in “Revelations of the World: Transnationalism and the Politics of Perception in Papua New Guinea,” American Anthropologist 116, no. 3: 626–42. Chapter 4 includes sections of “Can the Subaltern Listen? Self-Determination and the Provisioning of Expertise in Papua New Guinea,” published in American Ethnologist 44, no. 2: 328–40. And portions of chapter 1 incorporate materials from “The Perlocutionary is Political: Listening as Self-determination in a Papua New Guinean Polity,” Language in Society 44, no. 4: 525–52, which are reprinted with permission.

My research would not have been possible without generous financial support in the form of a Wenner-Gren Dissertation Fieldwork Grant, a Fulbright-Hays Doctoral Dissertation Research Abroad Fellowship, a Committee for Research and Education Grant from the National Geographic Society, and a postdoctoral fellowship from the Endangered Languages Documentation Programme.

Michael Silverstein, Susan Gal, Amy Dahlstrom and Salikoko Mufwene have provided invaluable support over the years. Their influence can be found on every page here. So too can that of Manuela Carneiro da Cunha and Robert Moore, whose impact extends well beyond the pages of this book. Luke Fleming has been my constant intellectual companion for two decades, and I simply cannot imagine thinking, let alone having so much fun doing it, without him.

Courtney Handman has, more than anyone, made this book what it is. Questioning every thought of mine and supporting me in every attempt to answer her questions, she has made my life—scholarship and all—better every day that I have known her. I also owe a deep debt of gratitude to the youngest of my teachers, my daughter Adele, who reminds me every day how much I have left to learn. And to my first teachers, my mother and father, Karen and Peter Slotta, who along with my sister Katy, gave me the gifts of curiosity and empathy that drove me to anthropology and the research for this book.

I am fortunate in many ways, but none more so than in having had such caring, supportive, and inspiring people to learn from throughout my life. This book is for all of you.
